ABSTRACT

Designed for high school students, this unit provides library activities for six topics in Pacific Northwest history. Although the references are located in the Renton High School (Olympia, Washington) library, the lessons are appropriate for anyone with access to the materials. The six topics are natural environment, Indians, western frontier, statehood, King County people and places, and the 20th century. The lessons are arranged uniformly for each topic. Annotated references with call number and location in the library are followed by color-coded worksheets. Using the references and working in pairs, students complete one question sheet from the three. Questions are designed to emphasize the contributions and impact of women and minorities in developing the Pacific Northwest. Suggestions on effective use of the unit and on how to devise more questions and answer sheets are also included. (IS)

A NOTE TO EDUCATORS

The library and social studies staff of Renton High School developed and tested this curriculum unit for use in social studies classes in Pacific Northwest History.

The primary objective of this unit is to provide students with "hands-on" experience in locating information in specialized reference publications available at Renton High School in order to assist in fact-finding. In addition, the reader is advised to identify and utilize newly available documents describing women's experiences on the historic westward journeys in the 1800's.

The questions are designed to emphasize the contributions and impact of women and minority people in developing the Pacific Northwest.

SPI

DR. FRANK B. BROUILLET

Superintendent of Public Instruction

Dear Educators:

The attached unit is designed for use in Pacific Northwest classes to familiarize students with resources available in their library for locating information about their state.

There are six bibliographies covering the major areas studied in PNW classes. Each bibliography has three different question sheets which are color coded. For example, the resources on the bibliography ABC are used to answer the questions on sheet A(blue), B(green) and C(yellow). The resources listed on bibliography DEF are used to answer the questions on D(blue), E(green) and F(yellow).

Students work in pairs and complete one question sheet from each bibliography in a four day period. Pair one has sheet A(blue), pair two has B(green), pair three has C(yellow), pair four has D(blue), pair five has E(green), through pair thirteen which has R(yellow). Students work thirty minutes on the first set of questions. (Note: by distributing the papers in the manner described, students are working on different questions at the same time.) After the work period, the papers are collected and students are given the next sequential sheet in the same color. Pair one A receives sheet D(blue), pair two gets E(green), pair three C, F(yellow) through pair eleven who had sheet P(blue) and now goes to A(blue), pair twelve receives B(green) and pair thirteen C(yellow). At the end of four days, all students have worked on question sheets in each of the six bibliographic areas, i.e., pair one worked on blue A, D, G, J, M, O, P. Pair thirteen has done yellow Q, C, F, I, L, O.

This unit is challenging. Only the best students will answer every question. Assure students that three correct per page is average. Encourage them to work quickly and cooperatively to get the best return on their time. The teacher and librarian need to be actively involved in order to assist students as they learn to use new reference works and accustomed resources in different ways.

Performance can be improved by classroom review of the use of key words: "see, see also, references, biographies, indexes"; and the terms, "format, non-print, print and source." Suggest that students remove only two items at a time from the shelf and reshelve them when they finish using them. Expect the first day to be the busiest as students adjust to the work situation.

Caution: Check that all materials listed are available in the collection. Eliminate questions that cannot be answered from your resources. After each class use, check that the materials are correctly reshelved and still available.
